

Keeping Teams Connected

Many organizations have implemented remote working strategies to keep up with the changing world. With this change comes challenges in finding new ways to elevate culture, motivate employees, and keep teams connected. Virtual recognition and social connections have become integral to engaging employees, bringing teams together, and inspiring performance. Finding a balance between what worked before and what works now is key to your organization's success.

What can your organization do to keep your teams connected and make the workplace shift work for you?

Virtual Recognition

Technology is what keeps us connected! With teams working remotely, it's more important than ever that efforts be made to keep employees feeling good about their work. Engagement technology and social recognition tools are effective in building excitement around employee successes and engaging teams across your entire organization.

A Hire to Retire Strategy

Milestone recognition continues to be foundational to any engagement strategy, with many new trends rapidly emerging. Organizations are now expanding the traditional every 5-year recognition to incorporate an onboarding to offboarding strategy with more frequent recognition touchpoints early in an employee's career. Additionally, connection with peers through social recognition tools enhance the milestone experience. Celebrating your employees with a hire to retire strategy will elevate your culture, strengthen employee morale, and boost performance.

Showing Gratitude

Your organization is made up of incredible people and saying "thanks" is more important than ever. By showing gratitude you are ensuring employees know they're still being seen and that their contributions are appreciated. Positive feedback from leaders and peers can go a long way and virtual recognition tools make it easy to give at any time, from anywhere.
